Musical Editor's Note

It is a great pleasure to present these compositions from Bill Evans' last years. My thanks to Nenette Evans and the Library of Congress for providing Bill's original manuscripts. The leadsheets included here follow these manuscripts very closely; some intros, endings, counter-melodies and such which do not appear in manuscript have been taken from Bill's own recordings.*

The piano arrangements are almost pure Bill, with only minimal editing to allow them to stand on their own as solo piano pieces. I hope you enjoy these tunes and share them with others.

Bob Bauer

Fit for Mary F., Tiffany and Yet Ne'er Broken are recorded only from unauthorized tapes of performances, August 15, 1980 in Bad Hönningen, Germany and August 31-September 7, 1980 at Keystone Korner Jazz Club, San Francisco, California, released in Europe and Japan. These recordings are listed in the Discography as a source of the arrangements only.

PREFACE

ıe compositions in this volume provide an especially revealing glimpse into the original music of Bill ;, for they demonstrate virtually all of the style characteristics that have distinguished him as one of the innovative pianists in jazz. The imaginative voicings, the lush harmonic language, the intricate contrapun- erplay between voices – every tune in this collection bears the mark of Evans' distinctive approach.

ill's Hit Tune" reflects Evans' interest in the music of Michel Legrand, especially in the rubato introduction its single motive theme is well suited to the developmental improvising for which Evans is so well known. peated-note motive of "Knit for Mary F." is another economically conceived composition that possesses witticism of a Cole Porter verse, but based on only two ideas. And similarly, "Letter to Evan" features ' characteristic use of pedal tones while "Yet Ne'er Broken" is a straight-ahead, high energy demonstration ıns' remarkable technique. "The Two Lonely People" reminds us of Bill's fondness for waltzes and both e We Met" and "Tiffany" (named after Joe LaBarbera's infant daughter) are subjected to a contrapuntal nent of the inner voices – another Evans trademark.

lthough one of the few jazz musicians to be unaffected by the "Free Jazz" movement of the 1960s or the on" of the 1970s, Evans nevertheless gradually reduced the number of standard tunes in his live rmances – a trend that conformed with the practice of many other jazz artists of that era. In their place he luced jazz originals – both his own and those of other composers. And it was these originals that formed re of his programs during the last decade of his career. Thus, all of the tunes in this volume, except "Since et" were an important part of his repertoire and were still being performed and recorded during his final gements at the Keystone Korner Jazz Club in San Francisco (CONSECRATION, Alpha R2 61-68) and during st public appearance in Germany (HIS LAST CONCERT IN GERMANY, Westwind 2022 or Polydor JOOJ). Even with his great love and knowledge of European classical music, Evans was first and foremost a jazz t, operating totally within the jazz tradition, but like a classical recitalist who identifies with a specific oire, Evans, during his last years, limited his live performances to a relatively small number of titles. He ently felt little need to continually replenish his material and preferred instead to refine and rework his riginals, a few of other composers, and some classic standards ("But Beautiful," "My Foolish Heart," omance," "Like Someone in Love"). Why Evans chose to narrow his repertoire towards the end of his life clear. The 1970s was perhaps his most prolific decade: steady recording schedule, fewer changes of nnel in his trio, greater self-confidence in his own creations and hence a more important role for his original ositions during the trio's performances. But for Bill Evans, it was also a decade of great physical and nal stress – and indeed, the tone of some of his late compositions may have been inspired by recent events tragic personal life.

at Evans has an affinity for the romantic, nostalgic, and on occasion, even the melancholy, is an observation as often been made of him. But the seven pieces included here also reveal the optimism and energy of an who has come to terms with his own creative abilities. These pieces present Bill Evans (the composer) as t assimilator of a variety of musical influences, but unlike other master assimilators, the end product still the composer's unmistakable imprint.
